The effects of COVID-19 continue to take a devastating toll on America's small businesses. Many Chambers of Commerce have had to learn how to pivot from live gatherings to virtual events and meetings. Even though the coronavirus has been challenging, organizations such as Florida Association of Chamber Professionals (FACP) continue to advocate for business owners and nonprofits throughout Florida. This month FACP hosted their spring conference, and Jeremy McLendon, Vice President of MyHealthily and John-David Garletts, Sales Manager with MyHealthily both participated.

The mission of FACP is to advance excellence in chamber management. This remarkable association serves more than 125 chambers across the state and enhances Florida's business communities by cultivating successful chambers professionals. With events such as "Make Your Community Story Shine," the Florida Association of Chamber Professionals reaches out to their community with support and helping hands to achieve success together. The FACP is a trusted resource for any Chamber of Commerce professional. From sales to operations and events to advocacy.

"Through our own experience with FACP," states Jeremy McLendon, Vice President, "MyHealthily continues to utilize the resources and apply the knowledge attained from FACP to remain relevant and vital for the success of our chamber partners and their community."

MyHealthily has partnered with FACP to support businesses through a new, innovative member benefit - Chambers of Florida Healthcare. Chambers of Florida Healthcare creates access to healthcare benefits for small businesses who are members of partnered chambers of commerce throughout Florida. We invite the Florida chamber community to celebrate the dedication of FACP to help build and protect the health of the local business community. Together with FACP, MyHealthily will provide the best available healthcare coverage solutions for FL chambers members. To learn more visit ChambersofFIHealthcare.com.
